

Delaney Gobster
Sustainability Director, Little John's Restaurant

Delaney works with Little John's coordinating their food rescue team and managing their food excess relationships. In addition to supporting Little John's excess resource and redistribution partnerships, this season Little John's food rescue team launched a gleaning volunteer program and a sustainable disposal initiative. Building off of her work in the community, Delaney researches landscapes of food excess and accessibility as a graduate student at the University of Wisconsin- Madison within the Agroecology Program and the Gibbs Land Use and Environment Lab. At the University, her research investigates the root causes of inequitable food distribution at a local level, and explores communication networks for food redistribution.